ABSTRACT

The purpose of this periodical is to enable national, regional and international units responsible for the indexing of science policy literature to learn of the variety of periodicals in the field. There are 838 periodicals listed in this publication; about 500 titles are known to have a large readership in science policy and research units while the rest were simply considered worthy of inclusion. The list is alphabetical by country in English and includes the title in the original language, English rendering of the title, publisher, editor, town of publication, country of publication, periodicity, and ISSN number. 1973 Provisional world list of periodicals dealing with science and technology policies

Paris - May 1974

The Unesco series "Science policy studies and documents" forms part of a programme "to collect, analyse and disseminate information concerning the organization of scientific research in Member States and the policies of Member States in this respect". This programme was authorized by resolution 2.1131(b), adopted by the Unesco General Conference at its eleventh session in 1960, and confirmed by similar resolutions at each subsequent session.

This series aims at making available to those responsible for scientific research and development throughout the world factual information concerning the science and technology policies of various Member States of the Organization as well as normative studies of a general character.

The national studies are carried out by the authorities responsible for science policy in the Member States concerned. The selection of the countries in which such studies are undertaken is made in accordance with the following criteria: originality of the methods used in the planning and execution of the national science policy, practical experience acquired in this regard and level of economic and social development attained by the country. The importance of the geographical region covered by the studies published is also taken into account in this selection.

The normative studies cover various aspects of science and technology policy, such as planning, organization and administration of research and its applications.

This same series also includes reports of international meetings organized by Unesco on science and technology policy and directories in the same field.

PREFACE

FRAMEWORK, PURPOSE AND SCOPE OF THE PROVISIONAL WORLD LIST OF PERIODICALS - The 1973 provisional world list of periodicals dealing with science and technology policies forms part of a project initiated in 1969 which also includes the Unesco Thesaurus on Science and Technology Policies, some 3,000 abstracts resulting from the 1972-1973 experimental indexing of literature in the area of science and technology policies (conducted with the help of specialists in Belgium, Bulgaria, France, Poland and the United Kingdom), and a Feasibility Study on the setting up of a science and technology policies information exchange system ("SPINES"), called for under a work plan approved by the General Conference at its 17th session.

The subject scope was determined taking into account the theory and practice of science and technology policies as developed in recent years in Unesco Member States and also in agreement with the definition of the field provided by the International Commission for Science Policy Studies of the International Union for the History and Philosophy of Science (IUHPS) of the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU), at its first meeting (Ulm, Federal Republic of Germany, July 1972), which reads as follows:

> "Science policy studies have as their focus the systematic investigation of scientific and technological activities and their function within society. In particular, they are concerned with policy-making in scientific and technological fields, and with the inter-relationship between policy-making, cultural values and social goals".

This approach to the definition of the field of science and technology policies is confirmed by the results of the surveys and analyses carried out by the Unesco Secretariat during the past decade or so, which indicate that the potential users of a science and technology policies information system are engaged in many different spheres of activity and have numerous centres of interest, e.g. governmental organizations, parliamentary groups, academic institutions, productive enterprises, international organizations, and that science and technology policy is"like a sprawling railway station where many disciplinary lines meet" as reflected in the following 16 areas which represent a basis for the delineation of the field:

1. Philosophy of science - theory of science
2. Systematization of science - classification of fields of science and technology
3. Ethics of science and technology - normative orientations of science and technology policies
4. History of science and technology since the 19th century - current trends in science and technology
5. Sociology of scientific workers
6. Creativity and psychology of scientific workers - methodology of research
7. R&D organization and management at the performer's level
8. Scientific and technological information
9. Economics of science and technology - financing of R&D
10. Development and planning of human resources for science and technology - education and training for R&D
11. Science, technology and public policy - planning, programming and budgeting of R&D at the national level
12. Scientific and technological forecasting, futurology, assessment of technology
13. Transfer and implantation of technologies
14. International science and technology policies - international co-operation in science and technology
15. Legislation in science and technology
16. Science and society - public understanding of science and technology.

The list of periodicals was compiled in the first instance with a view to enabling national, regional or international units responsible for the indexing of science policy literature to grasp the coverage of periodicals to be scanned systematically because they offer, regularly or occasionally, articles dealing with one or several of the science and technology policy fields.

It is hoped that the list will also prove to be generally useful, both to those already working in the science and technology policy field and those who are, as yet, unfamiliar with the subject. Hence it has been divided into two groupings so as to highlight the periodicals that are known to have a large readership in science policy teaching and research units. A single language has been used in compiling the list in order to maximize its value to one large group of users, and to facilitate its translation into other languages. In order to make identification as positive as possible, the ISSN serial number has been included wherever it is available.

COMPILATION - The list was drawn up in 1973 and it is current for that year. Hence periodicals which ceased publication before that date do not appear in it. This first attempt at a world list cannot be perfect, neither can its contents be considered as exhaustive. However, the fact that Unesco had access to all its Member States for the collection of information makes the present list unique as regards its international coverage.

It is provisionally foreseen that the Unesco Secretariat will keep the list up to date unless this responsibility is taken over by another organization, such as the Central Processing Group of the International Science Policy Information Exchange System, if created (1).

A few words on the history of the project will help to explain how the list was compiled. The original list of titles was obtained by combining the journals known to the Unesco Secretariat with those known to science policy research and teaching units with which the Unesco Secretariat had been in contact. This list was then extended by the inclusion of titles selected by the indexers in five countries who had taken part in the indexing of science policy literature in order to test and improve the first version of the Unesco Thesaurus of Science and Technology Policies (2).

The extended list was submitted to about 285 teaching and research units in 25 countries, of which 53% accepted to review it for frequency of usage. The units were also invited to submit additional titles which they use regularly. Thus some of the original titles were discarded because the units did not consider them to be sufficiently interesting, and new ones were added on their recommendation. This review gave rise to a list which makes up the bulk of the present work, i.e., about 838 titles. The second group of periodicals mentioned in the list, which are marked by an indicator and an indentation, consists of titles which the Unesco Secretariat considered to be worthy of inclusion. They amount to 346 titles in 51 countries and come from 5 sources, as follows:

(i) Replies from countries in which Unesco could not locate a science policy teaching and research unit, and where the list was sent for review to the Unesco National Commission instead.

(ii) The original list for a few countries from which no replies were received from science policy teaching and research units.

(iii) Periodicals which came to the attention of the Unesco Secretariat since the extended list was sent to the science policy teaching and research units in May 1973 and which appear to be suitable for inclusion.

(iv) Periodicals which were selected by the Unesco Secretariat from undifferentiated library acquisition lists sent in from science policy teaching and research units.

(v) Periodicals which the responding science policy teaching and research units indicated as not being used, but which nevertheless appear to the Unesco Secretariat to have a science policy content.

(2) To appear in 1974 in the Unesco series "Science Policy Studies and Documents".

Any judgement on the likelihood of a particular periodical being of value in science policy studies will inevitably be somewhat arbitrary, and especially so when the judgement is based only on the kind of information available rather than on familiarity with the periodical itself. However, with this in mind, some general ground rules for selecting the second group of periodicals were formulated as follows:

Apart from the rather small body of classic science policy specialized literature, the first line of demarcation drawn around topics included periodicals dealing with science or technology and those dealing with policy aspects such as management, law, philosophy, etc. Within this very wide area an attempt was then made to sift out, on the one hand, periodicals of a highly specialized disciplinary nature which demand considerable expertise on the part of the reader in order to understand and make use of their contents, and on the other hand periodicals devoted to applied technology, or of very narrow interest such as forestry or legal periodicals. This usefulness consideration occasionally led to topics being split, as in management literature where some kind of tenuous distinction was attempted between periodicals dealing with the economics of industrial operations or the management of the national economy and those dealing mainly with the professional affairs of managers. The latter were excluded. In carrying out this almost impossible task, the likely frequency of reference was borne in mind, and any periodicals which give useful science policy information only occasionally, or which would be referred to in articles in the main-stream literature, were discarded. A target figure of 10 to 15 references per year was borne in mind. A distinction was also made between developed and developing countries, a rather broader criterion being used for the latter so as to allow for their special concern with areas such as agriculture.

It is hoped that the list will promote international co-operation in the fields of science and technology policies, and will be of particular value to developing countries, whose literature is usually not well known, even in adjacent areas. By encouraging a wider familiarity with their journals, and the acquisition of ISSN numbers for them, it may be expected that their readership will grow - and hence also the quality of the indigenous science policy literature will be improved.

Users of the list are requested to forward corrections or suggestions for additions, particularly for the developing countries for which the information available is somewhat fragmentary. Sample copies of any additional publications would be of considerable help to the Secretariat. Amendments should be addressed to:

HOW TO CONSULT THE LIST

The list is arranged in alphabetical order of countries and, within the countries, by alphabetical order of titles. Under any given letter, acronyms are entered first, and these are followed by the titles in alphabetical order, letter by letter, with no allowance for word breaks. Initial articles have been ignored when they are not supported. However, the Arabic "Al" is not so ignored. Titles commencing with numbers are entered as though the number were written out in full in the language of the title.

The information is presented uniformly throughout, in the following order:

Indicator
1	Title, in original language
2	English rendering of title
3	Publisher
4	Editor
5	Town of publication
6	Country of publication
7	Periodicity
8	ISSN number

Details of the items are as follows:

Indicator (in the margin):

Where no dot (•) precedes the periodical entry and it is not indented, the periodical is one which a science policy teaching and research unit has indicated as being in regular use (838 titles).

Where the entry is indented and preceded by a dot (•), the periodical belongs to the second group referred to in the Preface.

1. Title: this is the current title of the publication and is given in the original language if the title is not published in a simultaneous English version. In a few cases the former title is given in brackets after the current title. For publications with an ISSN number (1) the key title is used (hence it conforms to the entry in Ulrich's International Periodicals Directory). Where there is no ISSN number, the title actually appearing on the front cover of the periodical was entered where this could be ascertained. Any sub-titles have been deleted. When an acronym appears in a title and the periodical is known by the acronymed title, it is listed as that; but in such cases the expansion of the acronym is given elsewhere in the entry, usually under item 3. Throughout the list, the use of abbreviations has been avoided as far as possible.

(1) An ISSN number will be assigned by any ISSN office (for list apply to 20 rue Bachaumont, Paris 75002) on receipt of a cover and a title page of a typical copy of a journal.

For journals published simultaneously in various languages, only one version has been entered, preferably the English version, failing which the native language title is entered.

The title includes the accents in use in the country, but the "u umlaut" has been suppressed throughout and written as "ue", in conformity with the draft UNISIST Reference Manual.

Non-roman alphabets have been transliterated in the countries of origin save for Cyrillic, which has been re-written according to the ISO standard as quoted in Ulrich, where this is available, or the almost identical draft UNISIST Reference Manual where it was not. No accents have been included in the re-written Cyrillic.

2. English rendering: this is an English equivalent (not a translation) intended only to facilitate the location of useful periodicals in unfamiliar languages. It should not be used as a reference title or as an official translation.

3. Publisher: this information is given where available. In making the list the publishing function has been regarded as belonging to the organization from which the periodical may be purchased, since it is presumed that the purpose of this item of information is to facilitate subscription. Also, with this in mind, the name of this publisher is given in the appropriate national language wherever possible. Frequently an institution sponsors a journal but takes very little part in its production. In such cases this institution does not appear in the entry. Where an institution is listed it is believed to exercise the full functions of a publisher. In rare cases this assignation of publisher transfers a periodical to another country, e.g. a Finnish one to the Netherlands.

4. Editor: the name is given where available (usually with a single initial) and without title, rank or sex.

5. Town of publication: in English rendering. The geographical location is written out in full to avoid abbreviations, and sufficient detail is given to locate it unambiguously, e.g. in the U.S.A., towns have the state, in full, appended.

For more detailed addresses of the publishers, reference should be made to Ulrich's International Periodicals Directory for any journal for which an ISSN number is quoted. For other journals, directories of publishers should be consulted.

6. Country of publication: in English rendering. The country is assigned according to the location of the publishing office, and not that of the editor or editors, except in cases where a publisher publishes simultaneously in the same language in more than one country (e.g. United Kingdom and U.S.A.); in such cases the journal has been assigned to the country where the editorial work is done.

7. Periodicity: the terms used in the present list are given below with their corresponding check number for publications per year to ensure clarity:

Weekly	52/year
Semimonthly	24/year	(in this list used also for biweekly, fortnightly)
Monthly	12/year
Bimonthly	6/year
Quarterly	4/year
Fourmonthly	3/year
Semiannual	2/year
Annual	1/year
Irregular	Copies appear at widely differing intervals

If the periodicity varies during the year, that which applies to the greater part of the year is entered, e.g. if a periodical is monthly with the omission of August, it is inserted as monthly, not 11 times per year.

Except for a few rare cases, periodicals appearing more frequently than once a week are excluded.

8. ISSN number: this consists of two parts, the country code and the ISSN number proper. The country code used is the three-digit ISO code (2) since this conforms to that used by the ISSN offices in their own internal documentation. However, it does not form part of the official ISSN number, which is not country specific and which consists solely of the letters "ISSN" and two blocks of four numbers.

Missing information:

(a) At all locations, an asterisk indicates that information is not available. Users of the list are requested to provide the Unesco Secretariat with the missing information, addressed as shown in the Preface.

(b) For some 50 countries no periodicals have been identified either by the Unesco Secretariat or by the National Commission for Unesco. It is hoped that users of the list will be able to provide the Unesco Secretariat with information on periodicals relevant to science and technology policy fields for these countries, and also for countries where the information given is incomplete.
